

The last issue of the Youth's Companion has on its front page illustrations of the new Wentworth Institute, Boston, an industrial school designed to furnish young men and boys a thorough and practical instruction in the different trades. This new school is to do just what has been done for the wards of the State at the Vermont Industrial school at Vergennes under the wise direction of Supt. Barss and Director Weeks, for several years. Here not only the trades and mechanical arts are taught but agriculture, dairying, how to care for and feed stock; how to make butter, test milk, etc., all that is done in a first class creamery. The people of Vermont have good reason to be proud of the fact that the State leads in this as in many other things for the advancement of civilization.
